GWUSA Wins Big—6 to 1

Document Is Ratified— Trustee Vote Is Next

by Larry Olmstead
Managing Editor

GW students overwhelmingly approved the establishment of the George Washington University Student Association (GWUSA) constitution in the student government referendum Tuesday and Wednesday. If approved by the Board of Trustees in May, student government could return to GW in the fall for the first time in six years.

The landslide 1,343 to 241 vote easily satisfied the two requirements of the Joint Committee of Faculty and Students for ratification of the document. The Committee had voted in Febuary to require that at least 1,000 students vote yes in the referendum, and that the number of affirmative votes be a majority of ballots cast, in order to ratify the constitution.

The vote was announced at 9:35 p.m. last night by Joint Committee student co-chairman Jeff Nable. Student Activities Director David G. Speck had earlier predicted the votes would be counted by 10 p.m.

News of the vote was received joyously by delegates to the constitutional convention, who had begun their celebration even prior to announcement of results of the vote. The results bore out convention campaign manager Andrew Kline's prediction that the constitution would attract 1,000 yes votes if at least 1,500 voted in the election.

Joint Committee faculty co-chairman Stefan O. Schiff said he was extremely happy over the results, but student co-chairman Jeff Nable felt the turnout was "atrocious." [for more reaction, see related story]

The 1,343 yes votes represents a whopping 84.8 per cent of those voting in favor of the GWUSA document. It compares favorably with the 69 per cent of GW students who voted in favor of the referendum in February of 1970 which called for the abolishment of student government.

The vote total of 1,584 is the largest on any question at GW in recent years. The last student government elections, held in 1970, attracted 1,478 voters, which itself was a decline over totals of 2,209 and 2,309 voters in 1969 and 1968 respectively, and seemed to back up the claim of then-government President Neil Portnow that apathy had made abolition of student government necessary.

The last two Program Board/ Governing Board elections, held in February of 1975 and 1976, attracted 803 and 1,037 votes respectively.

Last year, in a mail referendum on student government conducted by the Joint Committee, which has overseen the student government effort since a proposal for an All-University Assembly was defeated in October 1974, students voted 1,472 to 270 in favor of the reinstitution of student government. They also favored the creation of a constitutional convention to draft the document.

The constitution is expected to go to the Board of Trustees Committee on Student Affairs for a final mark-up, and then on to the full Board for their expected approval May 15.

"I'm delighted"

As constitutional convention delegates milled around their Marvin Center office last night and celebrated their landslide victory in the student referendum, members of the faculty, administration and students reacted favorably.

Convention chairman Barry Epstein was predictably elated. "I'm exhilarated," he said. "It's been a long hard road. GWUSA has a long fight ahead of it. There are good people here to run it. GWUSA will be a good organization."

Epstein did not rule out the possibility that he might make a try for a GWUSA office in next fall's elections.

Stefan O. Schiff, faculty co-chairman of the Joint Committee of Faculty and Students, which in December refused to accept the work of the convention and then made a turnabout in position in February, said, "I'm delighted that student government will be reinstated. I'm sure that whatever might be wrong with it can be ironed out with time and experience."

Jeff Nable, student co-chairman of the Joint Committee, was not as enthusiastic. He described the voting turnout of 1,584 as "atrocious," but added, "Now that some people have what they want, I hope they can make it fly."

Nable's opinion of the voting turnout was countered by Joint Committee member Margo Broder, who said, "I'm happy to see as many people vote as did."

Although Student Activities Director David G. Speck declined comment on the result, he said he was pleased with the way the balloting process, which his office supervised, had gone. He said there were "zero errors in balloting," and said he took "great pride in that."

Vice President for Student Affairs William P. Smith said he thought the voting turnout was light, but added, "I think a student association here has an opportunity to make a positive contribution to student life, though I think it's going to take time," because of the transient nature of the University and the problems of representing all facets of the University community.

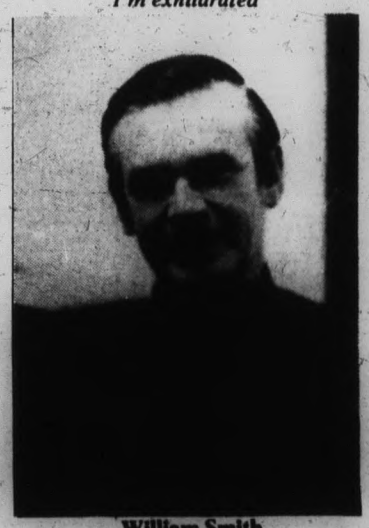

Smith said he was looking forward to the fall elections for GWUSA positions to see how students will accept the organization. "I think it's going to be interesting to see what fall brings," he said.

A spot check of ten GW students on 21st Street after the results were announced was almost unanimously positive. Only one student, who refused to give her name, expressed displeasure with the outcome. "I'm very surprised that it did pass after reading it [the constitution]," she said. "It wasn't very complete."

Other students, however, were more enthusiastic. "I'm quite pleased with the result. It's about time," Kevin Lipson said. Rick Miller said, "It's providing the students a voice in the University—a voice that has been sorely lacking." And Mindy Kirchner exclaimed, "Great! It's good to know you'll be represented in some way."

Working With Community

BPU Seeks Equality, Equity

by Alan Lawrence
Hatchet Staff Writer

Ed. Note: This is the second of a two-part series on the Black Peoples's Union.

"Our country does not provide opportunity for black people to advance. It's a process that starts right at the grassroots and works up, from the classroom to the business world," according to Black People's Union (BPU) President Rodney Bright. "The BPU's purpose is to give back to the community what we have learned."

Bright, a sophomore who commutes from his D.C. home, stressed the idea that a solution to the problems of discrimination and repression could be found by working with the community. He said the BPU at GW is not limited to students, and pointed out that about one-third of its members are University workers. Bright said he felt there was no room for class distinction in the black movement.

The BPU suffers from an image problem, Bright said. "We've been misrepresented in the past. Though it's true that the BPU has not used Hatchet ad resources to the fullest extent due to lack of funds, it's also true that coverage [of BPU events] has not been adequate," he said.

One BPU emphasis is on community involvement, Bright said. One result of this emphasis is the Educational Opportunity Program (EOP), which was set up by the University in 1969 partly as a response to BPU pressure. The program seeks to enroll black D.C. students at GW so they can use their GW education in the community after graduation, Bright said.

While calling EOP "highly successful," Bright said he felt the administration should have gone further, including honoring an orginal request from black GW students for 100 EOP scholarships a year, rather than the 40 granted. Asked if he considered EOP a token program, Bright commented, "I think the administration sees it that way." He added, "The number [of scholarships] should be increased, perhaps to even more than 100."

Bright said that discrimination "is no longer in the outward way of the 50's and 60's with separate facilities, but with institutional racism. The black man is kept down by the fact that the cost of living is rising but salaries are not. The little man, both black and white, is controlled by big business," although Bright stressed that blacks were more affected by this.

He said it is monopolies, not the "figureheads" of government, who control America and its foreign policy. To correct this, Bright said he felt the people should not only be made more aware but also be shown that they are not helpless. The blackboard behind him reflected his ideas with the quote written on it, "A house divided cannot stand, a house united can not fall."

Bright said the black movement is a revolution, but said he did not feel the oppressed before the revolution would become oppressors once in power. "I don't think we would. It's not our nature," he said. "Our kindness has been our downfall. Then again, who can say?"

Other BPU members interviewed by the Hatchet declined to let their names be used because of what they described as the sensitivity of the subject; one said, "I don't want the hassles."

One BPU member said she felt the organization "is not functioning in the mainstream of the black movement" which she attributed to "careerism" or students placing priority on getting an education and finding a job.

Other student reaction was mixed. One black freshman who isn't a member said, "They get the impression that blacks are being shut out by the University. In some instances it's so, but they overemphasize their cause. They're out to beat the system and it just can't be done."

A black employee on campus who hasn't become involved with the BPU said, "I'm just not into segregating myself, between black or white."

BPU members also hold different opinions about the organization. Leo Sanford saw the BPU as "a place to study and relax. It gives people on campus a chance to meet people off campus." Gloria Hollingsworth, another BPU member, said "The BPU is essential for black people down here, in that it keeps us united socially and politically."

Member Donovan Smith said, "The BPU operates under the supposition that America has yet to maximize the ideologies and doctrines as expressed in the constitution. Its goal is to perpetuate the manifestations of promises into the whole society."

BPU Communications Chairman Monica Jordan said the organization has "loads of potential" but added that many members were "losing interest bit by bit." Jordan said she felt the BPU must turn its efforts into dealing with this apathy.

"The BPU should educate the membership and increase their awareness about what's going on both nationally and internationally," another member said. "It should create a forum for the exchange of ideas and possibly voice its views on issues more often."

One member felt the BPU "doesn't serve the majority of black people on campus," which she blamed on the misconception people have of the BPU as a radical, militant organization. She said many persons, including the administration, "don't realize we function as simply a black peoples' union, a student organization." She felt that more persons should become involved and gain from the benefits the organization has to offer, specifically, a chance to meet with other blacks.

Jordan saw the BPU as an aid in helping new black students adjust to the University environment. "Most of these students have gone to black schools. To them this is a whole different world. They need help to adapt to it and the BPU offers that help."

Many members said they felt that the BPU was doing the best it could to fight discrimination, but one junior pointed out, "It can alleviate the practices, which is a start, but it can't eliminate prejudice in peoples' minds. That must be done on the individual level."

GW Students Back Patrol Dogs, But See Room For Improvement

by Wissie Wisner
Hatchet Staff Writer

The recent rapes in the University parking garage have worried not only female members of the GW community but males as well, some of whom said last week that while they felt the parking garages are safer because of the addition of guard dogs, the administration has not yet taken enough precautions to make other areas of the campus safer.

"What about the rest of the campus?" asked sophomore Wael Almousa, one of a dozen persons interviewed in an opinion sample. "The administration should put more alarms in the garages, the theater, Lisner [Auditorium], C Building and in other campus buildings," she said.

Almousa, who lives off campus, said "The rapes affect me because it's a human thing—my friends could get raped."

Michael Turner, a dog handler at GW for the Metropolitan Bureau of Investigation (MBI), which is supplying the patrol dogs in the garages, said he felt at least one dog should always be patroling the campus. "A dog is worth three security officers," he explained. "They have better hearing and smell, and they're trained to sense danger."

Freshman Joe Lamagna said he felt that the addition of guard dogs is a deterrent to potential rapists, but expressed dissatisfaction because the University waited so long to bring in a more effective security system.

The guard dogs are viewed positively by many students, and many said the expense to the University is seen as negligible in terms of its necessity. "GW has enough money to take care of its students," Almousa said. "They have a responsibility to use our tuition money to keep us safe."

Law student Darrell Olson said the dog patrols should stay, although he would "like to see the dogs roaming around inside the garages more often."

Jeff Brooks, a graduate student, said the garages are "scary even for a guy," but added, "D.C. has a bad crime rate and we just happen to be in the middle of it." Junior Eddie Bannourah also said he felt unsafe on campus. "Now I prefer to walk my friends to their cars," he said.

Bannourah and others expressed discontent that GW had to go outside of the University for a more effective security system. "GW police should have sole responsibility for the campus," Bannourah said. Austin Healy, a Madison Hall freshman, added that "maybe they [the administration] should look for a solution within the [University] system."

MBI has jurisdiction only in the garages, while GW Security is responsible for the rest of the campus. The bureau has been contracted for three months, after which the program will be evaluated.

W. Va. Lawyer Hits Offensive Textbooks

"The issue is not so much censorship, but who shall censor," lawyer James T. McKenna told an audience of about 20 in Marvin Center Tuesday night.

McKenna represents a group of West Virginia parents who are against the use of certain literary materials in the libraries and classrooms of the West Virginia public school system. The group has protested by burning copies of the more than 300 books it finds offensive.

The parents charge that the books promote socialist and anti-nationalist views by attacking religion, the U.S. economic system and patriotism. "Any educator worth a damn," McKenna said, "will tell you that the mind of a young child is extremely malleable. It is the question of who shall determine the character of the person—the educator or the family," he said.

McKenna, who described the "book burners" as fundamentalists and Christians, pointed out that "parents don't want to pay for obnoxious materials. They don't want their kids to have to read this stuff."

As examples, McKenna referred to Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, which he said was too socialist in content, and Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn, which he charged was racist.

McKenna said the family, which he called "an absolutely essential element" of society, was currently involved in "the mildest, but a visible form of revolution."

According to McKenna, whose speech was co-sponsored by the Program Board and Young Americans for Freedom, the West Virginia parents want a say in what their children are exposed to in school. However, he said, "The government of the U.S. is about as hostile to the family as a government can be."

Although the actions of the West Virginia parents' "may destruct the public school system," McKenna said, he is strongly in favor of community censorship.

Incident Provokes Questions On Center Employee Dining

by Larry Olmstead
Managing Editor

Although Macke managers agreed that the problem with persons not on the meal plan eating in contract cafeterias without paying is minimal, Center Director Boris Bell is planning to send a memo warning Center employees on unauthorized cafeteria use as a result of a recent incident in the second floor cafeteria

The action came after Joint Food Services Board (JFSB) Chairman Drucilla Dunton complained to Bell about a Center night manager eating a free meal at the second floor cafeteria.

Last Saturday, according to Dunton, she spotted Center night manager Jeff Milstein enter the cafeteria back entrance and walk to the food area. She asked him if he intended to pay for the meal, and he told her that he thought there was a reciprocity agreement between the Center and the Macke corporation, and he did not think he had to pay, she said.

She then asked the cafeteria checker if Milstein had paid for the meal, and he said nothing, she said.

There is no reciprocity agreement between the Center and Macke, according to Bell. "We do not encourage student employees to have special privileges in the first or second floor cafeterias," he said.

Bell said he planned to look into the incident and "stop it [unauthorized cafeteria use] immediately."

Both Macke second floor manager Stewart Alcorn and GW food service director Alan Clarkson said the unauthorized free use of the Center food facilities was not a big problem, although Clarkson said he recognized the "potential for a problem."

Donald Hawthorne, former food service director at GW before his mysterious disappearance in December, told JFSB in November that student pilferage of food and equipment cost the Macke corporation some $19,000 annually. The cost is made up, he said, 'v increasing food contract rates.

According to Dunton, persons who eat free at the contract cafeterias contribute to the "Macke rip-off rate," the amount of money the food service budgets to cover the costs of student and employee food and utensil pilferage.

A Rathskellar source said many Macke employees, particularly in the Rat, ate meals for free when they're not working, which is not supposed to be allowed. "I know one guy who works at the Rat who eats down here [the second floor cafeteria] five days a week," he said. He added that the worker was not scheduled for duty on those days.

According to food service director Alan Clarkson, Macke is required

Frats Changing Status With The Times

by Sue Kuhn
Hatchet Staff Writer

Ed Note: This is the second part of a two part series on fraternities and sororities at GW.

While both fraternities and sororities suffered losses in number and membership during the anti-war era, opinion is divided as to whether, on this campus, the losses have bottomed out and significant regrowth has begun.

GW has not been a participant in the recent national growth in fraternities and sororities to as large a degree as other universities. According to John E. Perkins, assistant to the vice president for student affairs and former coordinator for student activities and orientation who worked with the Greeks, "The system has not changed appreciably since I've been here [six years] and I see no really strong signs that say 'yes, it's going to be a lot different here at GW'."

Perkins noted that the fraternities have stabilized, and "held their own." There are presently eight fraternities, each with an average membership of 15-20.

One of these eight, Phi Sigma Kappa, became active at GW again this fall after having gone off this campus several years ago, selling its house to another fraternity. Alumni of the chapter who remained in the Washington area stayed in touch with the campus, noticed a positive change in attitude toward fraternities, an increase in fraternity membership, and decided that "things looked better than they had in the past," according to chapter advisor Rick Roth.

The new chapter was approved by the fraternity's national organization and began rushing in the summer of 1975. It presently numbers 18 members.

Doug Darling, former President of the Interfraternity Forum (IFF) and a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon (SPE) commented on the renewed interest of students in fraternities. "The general attitude [of incoming students] has been improving," he said. "We've had huge turnouts for rush the past two years."

Delta Phi Sigma, another fraternity which has been recently inactive at GW has been in touch with IFF and plans to return to active status in the fall, Darling said.

Music Equipment Missing

by John Russonello
Hatchet Staff Writer

The GW music department has been hit with numerous thefts over the past two years and has lost over $7,000 worth of equipment that has not been replaced by the University, according to music department chairman George Steiner.

Among the missing items have been two pianos, one a 10-foot concert grand, he said.

The most recent theft occurred two weeks ago when a box containing equipment worth approximately $550 and irreplacable music was stolen from the stage of Lisner Auditorium, Steiner said.

The losses are not covered by insurance, as the University carries theft insurance only on materials covered by government grants. The reason for this, according to Mildred Ewart, insurance and legal assistant to Vice President and Treasurer Charles E. Diehl is, "It's more practical for us to pick up the tab on thefts ourselves."

Diehl explained that the cost of carrying theft insurance is exorbitant. "We can absorb the cost of stolen goods," he said.

Steiner said that among the items in the box were drumsticks, music stands, a snare drum, cymbal, tambourine and triangle. He is planning to seek a grant from GW Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs Harold F. Bright to replace the missing equipment if it is not recovered.

In the past when music department equipment has been reported missing "we usually have been able to replace it," Steiner said. He said the funds come from the provost's office, not the department.

This was the first time in Steiner's recollection that music department equipment had disappeared from

Frats Confront Master Plan

FRATS, from p. 3

Of the eight active fraternities, six are located on G Street, and four of these (Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Sigma Nu, Delta Tau Delta, and Sigma Chi) own their houses. The other two (Sigma Phi Epsilon and Kappa Sigma) are renting from the University. All four houses are located in the block between 20th and 21st streets, which is scheduled for demolition under the Master Plan for Campus Development.

The alumni groups of the fraternities have formed the Fraternity Housing Corporation as a bargaining arm for the entire Greek system. "We want the University to know that they can't buy us out one by one. They have to deal with us together," explained Rich Long, a SPE alumnus who helped in the forming of the group. "We want the University to grow and expand, but not at our expense."

Long explained that the fraternities are looking to trade land with each fraternity retaining its own house with living area.

Tau Kappa Epsilon, now located across 22nd Street from the Smith Center, formerly owned land in the southeast corner of the block on which the gym is located. They gave up their property to the University in exchange for their current location, according to GW Real Property Manager Clarence D. Walter.

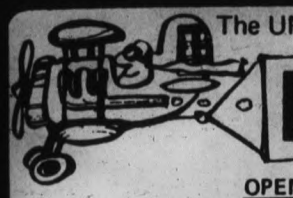

The two sororities which remain on campus, Delta Gamma (DG) and Kappa Kappa Gamma (KKG), have memberships under 15 each. After years of decline in membership, both groups registered a slight increase this year, and are hopeful of continuing to do so, "with a lot of hard work," according to DG president Robin Meima.

The sororities have had a harder time recovering from the late 60's than the fraternities. Perkins felt this was because of "old fashioned rushing techniques" which did little to alter women's perceptions of sororities as "holdovers from the '60's" rather than groups which have changed with the times.

In the past, for example, there were strict rules regulating the amount of contact a sorority woman could have with a potential member.

Today, the rules are gone, and each chapter carries out rush on a more informal basis. Panhellenic Council, the inter-sorority coordinating body, sets dates for rush, and tries to avoid scheduling conflicts between the two groups, but by and large each group works independently

You've been there. Now you can help them.

They've got a long way to go. In a world that isn't easy. But with someone's help, they'll make it. What they need is a friend. Someone to act as confidant and guide. Perhaps, it could be you as a Salesian Priest or Brother.

The Salesians of St. John Bosco were founded in 1859 to serve youth. Unlike other orders whose apostolate has changed with varying conditions, the Salesians always have been — and will be, youth oriented. Today we're helping to prepare youngsters for the world that awaits them tomorrow. Not an easy task but one which we welcome.

And how do we go about it? By following the precepts of our founder, Don Bosco. To crowd out evil with reason, religion and kindness with a method of play, learn and pray. We're trying to build better communities by helping to create better men.

As a Salesian, you are guaranteed the chance to help the young in a wide range of endeavor . . . as guidance counselors, technical and academic teachers, as coaches, psychologists . . . in boys clubs, summer camps . . . as missionaries. And you are given the kind of training you need to achieve your aims.

The Salesian family is a large one (we are the third largest order) but a warm one. A community with an enthusiastic family feeling where not only our talents are shared but our shortcomings, too. If you feel as we do, that service to youth can be an important mission in your life, we welcome your interest.

by law to feed employees while they are on duty.

Alcorn said Macke had fairly tight procedures to prevent entry into the contract cafeteria by those who don't pay. For example, he said, the checkers are responsible for verifying student identification cards and taking meal tickets. "I have a lot of faith in my checkers," he said.

Clarkson said one person's eating a meal would not significantly affect Macke's costs. He also felt that the costs of unauthorized eating were "impossible to determine," but that they were "absolutely rock-bottom minimal" as far as Macke employees were concerned.

Clarkson added, "We don't like to get ripped off even for one meal."

Dunton made a "guestimate" that "about 50" people eat Macke for free each week. While she said the problem of Center employees alone eating for free wasn't extensive, she said the total number adds up.

Mark Berthold, a weekday night manager, said center employees eating at the cafeterias for free was "limited to just a few." Berthold said he always paid for food.

Milstein said that since he could not leave the Center during his working hours, he was forced to eat there. He added that Alcorn was "aware that I ate there," and that he often paid for his meals.

Asked Monday whether he had ever checked to see if Milstein was paying, Alcorn said, "It's funny, it occurred to me when I saw him yesterday" to ask.

Milstein said later it was Alcorn's way of saying "he's looking the other way."

Alcorn said he had no policy of looking the other way when Center employees ate in the cafeteria, and had no arrangements with individual employees, saying, "No, I can't afford to do that."

Hanson New Dean

Assistant Dean of Students Gail S Hanson has been appointed dean of students, to replace Marianne Phelps. She will take over the position July 1.

A native of Illinois, Hanson came to the University in 1970 as the resident director of Thurston Hall, was made assistant director for housing services in 1972, and was appointed assistant dean of students in 1974.

Phelps was appointed last month as assistant provost for affirmative action, also effective July 1.

Sheet Music Cannot Be Replaced

ORCHESTRA, from p. 4

Lisner. Security Director Harry W. Geiglein said there are very few thefts in Lisner. "Right now, all I know is that the box has been reported missing," Geiglin said. The Metropolitan Police Department has not yet been notified, he added.

Steiner said he discovered the box missing from the Lisner stage on March 24. Auditorium Manager Francis J. Early said the trunk-sized box was last seen on March 21 by Lisner custodian O.D. Sligh, who noticed it had been moved from the left of the stage, where it is usually kept, to the right side.

According to Early, the box was probably moved during the Billy Cobham concert at Lisner the night before.

Steiner and Early both said they felt the box was more likely to have been stolen than lost. "The box is very heavy and it takes two people to lift," Steiner said. "I suspect a theft, probably by two people."

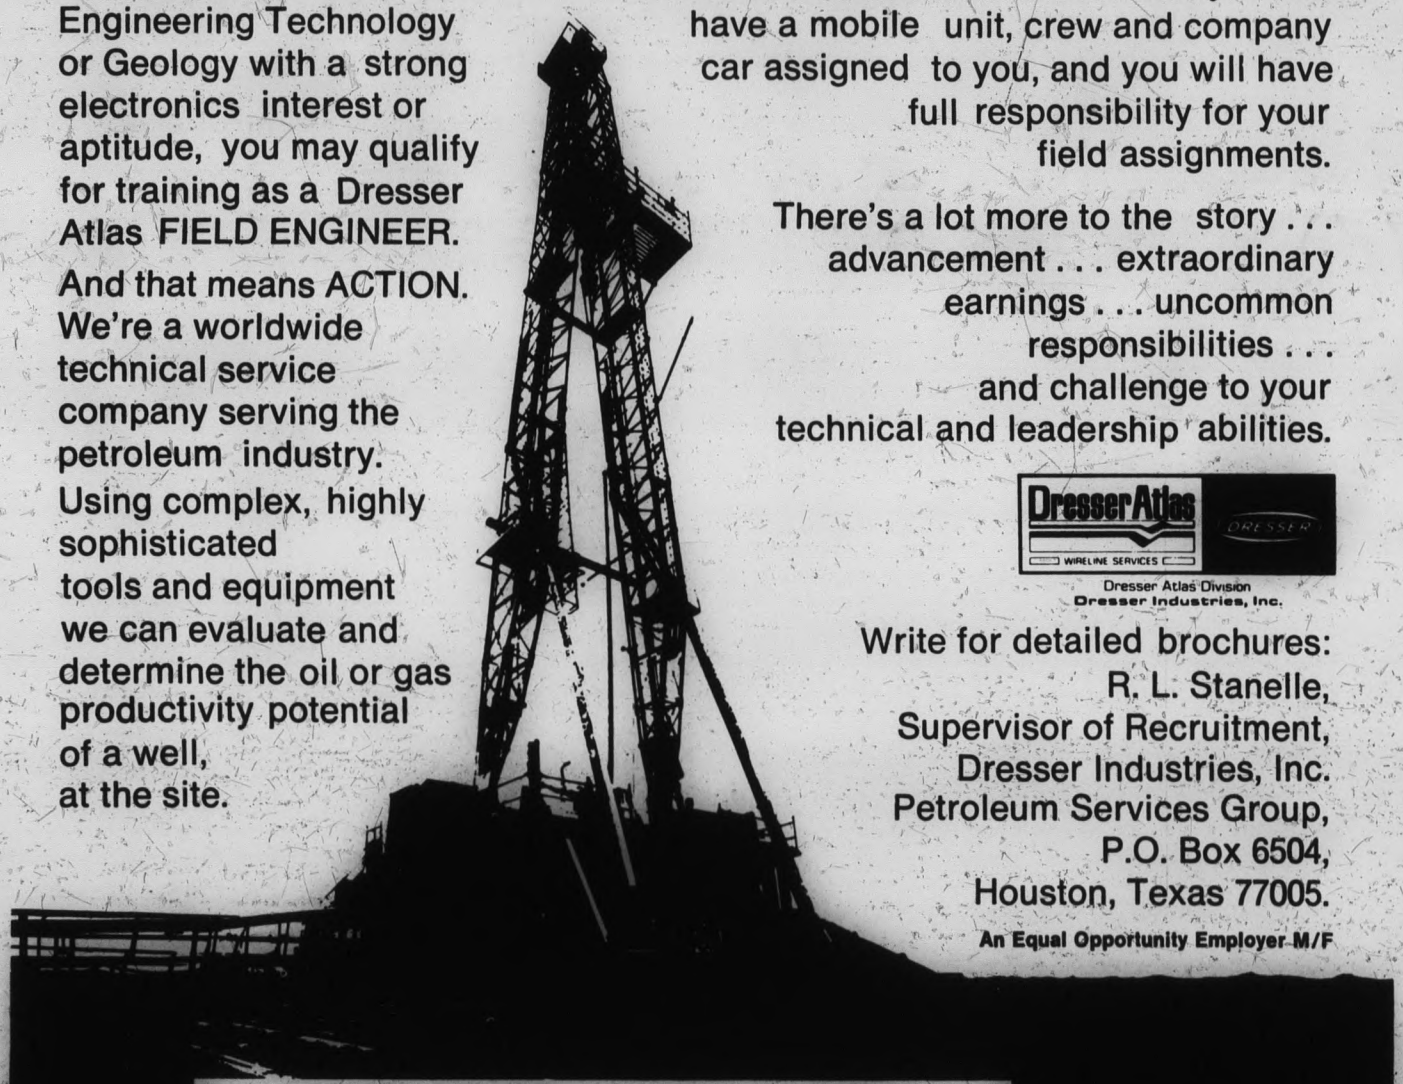

Early pointed out that the box is on four "very noisy" casters, making its movement by a single person without detection difficult. Early said it was possible that "two people could have gotten it out quickly and into a pick-up truck."

"A few times in the past, things in the music department got lost, so we decided to build the box to keep everything safe," said Steiner.

Truffaut Conveys Emotions In Study of Adele H. Story

by Scott Lebar
Hatchet Staff Writer

The complex emotion of love may be the most difficult emotion to fully convey on a movie screen. The love of a mind that is slightly bent out of shape is probably even more difficult to convey. But director Francois Truffaut has done just that in his powerful psychological study, The Story of Adele H.

Truffaut is often pigeonholed, like directors Kubrick, Fellini, Bergman, Wertmuller, into that cliche "the only stars of their films are themselves."

In the case of The Story of Adele H, the cliche would be true if it wasn't for the captivating frantic performance of Isabelle Adjani. For The Story of Adele H is a vehicle where both can show off their talents, which they have plenty of. The result, while sometimes uneven, is still remarkable.

Isabelle Adjani portrays Adele H.

Adele H is Adele Hugo, daughter of French author Victor Hugo. In 1863, at the age of 33, she left her home in Guernsey (located in the English Channel) and traveled to Halifax, Nova Scotia in search of a Lieutenant Pinson. She was love-possessed while he considered her a royal pain in the neck. She begged, blackmailed, tried to use money, lied and even offered other women as gifts in her desperate attempts to win Pinson over.

Pinson, who was pretty much of a scoundrel anyway, wouldn't be swayed. For years this woman nearly drove him crazy. But she drove herself crazy first with her religious obsession to have her spiritual love requited. After she followed him to Barbados, she was taken home, her mind and soul destroyed.

This, for the most part, is history. Truffaut has based his movie on the recently decoded diary of Adele Hugo, who, after 43 years in an asylum, died in 1915. Truffaut bends the facts a bit, making Adele a younger and more dramatic character. It serves his work well.

And it is the 20-year-old Adjani who, with Truffault's meticulous direction, takes his creation and makes it blossom. She is a bundle of emotional energy. Love, hate, agony, despair, spiritual happiness, despondency—they all seem to be well within Adjani's realm of convincing expression.

That she did not receive an Academy Award for her performance is understandable though. While she is certainly capable, hers can sometimes be a tedious role with which not many people can feel sympathy. It is perhaps an obstacle that no actress or actor could overcome.

Nevertheless, Adjani takes on the almost solo performance looking like a stage actress who has perfected her performance over many years of experience. In fact, The Story of Adele H has many play-like qualities to it—the limited number of players, the central location and the main action consisting of dialogue between Adele, herself, and rarely more than two other people.

But this is where the other star of the film makes himself known. Truffaut enhances Adjani's acting with dark, foreboding settings and photography. The whole movie maintains a darkened quality. Adele's clothes are generally muted reds (except when she initially meets her Pinson; then she wears an appropriate blue). The lighting focuses on her pale face, giving her an eerie, surreal presence.

When she finally goes over the deep end, Truffaut gives us light. But this adeptly showed Adele's destitute state. Her face still pale, with eyes sunken and framed in brown sleepless circles, she wanders the street of Barbados staring straight ahead.

But even in this light, Truffaut doesn't give up his dark imagery. He has Adele always walking along the walls that line the streets. She rarely steps out of their shadows. It is this meticulous, eye catching imagery that helps to relate the feelings of Truffault's anti-heroine.

We never quite understand the cause and effect relationship of the short circuiting going on inside Adele Hugo's head. Her history previous to her arrival in Halifax, except for her obsession with the death of her sister Leipoldine, is left unexplained. Maybe this history is more common knowledge to the French. Or maybe Truffaut chose not to explain but show graphically her deterioration instead. If this is so, he certainly succeeded.

It's Up To You

After spending a year writing their document, and mounting a vigorous and effective campaign (with the help of a lack of organized opposition), constitutional convention delegates must feel proud— and rightfully so— for scoring a victory in yesterday's GWUSA referendum (see story, p. 1). The very fact that the convention has survived to this point, surmounting obstacle after obstacle, many placed in their way by themselves, is a testimony to perseverance and almost as amazing as the realization that GW is close to having a student government for the first time in six years.

Students, their political awareness at least somewhat stimulated by the long campaign for student government, must realize that the work is not completed just because a document was finished and votes were cast. There is only one way any student government can work— with the interest and input of the student body.

This will particularly be true in the case of GWUSA. Because of the dormant state of student government in the 1970's at GW, and the resultant power structure that has developed which centers around the administration, the delegates were forced to write a document that sets up a basic structure which does not provide direct influence or power. Only a mobilized student body will enable GWUSA to get influence in the University governing system. An apathetic student body will allow student government to reach the same status that the old student assembly had in Febuary of 1970, when then assembly president Neil Portnow abolished it.

We hope the Board of Trustees will act expeditiously in approving the GWUSA document as the will of the GW students, as it is expected to. After this, the ball game belongs to the student, and we can only wait to see if students will be the real winners of this week's referendum.

Tighten Up

With contract food costs as high as they are, and scheduled to go even higher next year, the actions of some Marvin Center employees in unauthorized free use of the Center second floor cafeteria (see story, p. 3) can only serve, in the long run, to raise prices even higher.

If, as JFSB chairman Drucilla Dunton estimates, as many as 50 persons are getting free meals in this fashion per week, something is obviously wrong with the way the operation is being run. This volume of freeloaders contributes a sizeable chunk to the Mack "ripoff rate," which at last count was costing $19,000 per year.

The vigilance of Macke must be lacking, if that many persons are eating for nothing. Macke managers may have faith in their meal ticket checkers, but that faith may have little foundation if 50 persons are slipping by them weekly.

The management of the Center is also remiss in not strictly laying down the law about employees who use their duties as an excuse to get into the cafeteria at no personal expense. The employees wind up collecting double from the students— in their paychecks and in the meals which are indirectly paid for by the students on the meal plan. Hopefully, both Macke and the Center managements can put a quick end to the practice.

Grab GW By Money Belt

Recruitment—the word rings with the sense of encouraging, cajoling and conning people into joining something in which they would not have enrolled before being inundated by encouraging propaganda. For GW and every other institution of higher learning in the nation this is a year round effort, reaching its peak when prospective freshmen and transfer students choose to pay their tuition to one school rather than any other.

Also, for GW and the rest, much of the recruitment process is informal. After two semesters students tell those friends in high school or contemplating transfer what a good year they enjoyed at the college of their choice.

Here is the question which GW students must consider before they unwittlingly become part of the recruitment process: In light of the University's rape of Foggy Bottom's architecture, the continued tolerance of Macke's fiasco food service, the hiring of a housekeeping service that treats its employees unfairly and the refusal to permit any student government to exist except as an innocuous one, how can any conscientious GW student or alumnus recommend that other persons enroll here?

Many of these issues appear to be linked to money in one way or another. For example, GW has a penchant for high-rise office buildings on its potentially lucrative real estate in downtown Washington. The most recent manifestation of this involves a proposed structure on F Street, one of the few remaining streets on campus without sheer concrete walls and square windows.

The administration insists that rent from office buildings help pay for and, as a result, improve the quality of education. Yet the only recent changes in education are at the administrative end, with the revamping of the registration process. Students should question the new system's effectiveness when recalling that they received two computer printouts of their class schedules rather than one.

Money is important, as are old friends of the University, like Macke, whose contract was to be competed for through bidding by other caterers interested in taking on GW's food service. However, Macke will still be around, despite the bidding and continued pressure from the University community. It would be helpful to understand the full extent of GW's relations with Macke when analyzing the absurdity of its poor service and continuing tenure here.

In addition to the Servicemaster Company's poor treatment of GW's housekeeping staff and the aforementioned administrative follies, there is the reluctance of Rice Hall and the Board of Trustees to recognize the need for viable, powerful student government.

The student assembly in the latter part of the anti-war movement was disbanded at GW, because it was seen as nothing more than a farce. The assembly did not respond to the interests and needs of a student community engaged in the national process of social and political upheaval. The Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam (MOBE) took care of this function.

With the shift of student attention recently from the streets to the plush offices of University decision makers, the need was seen for formal student input into the running of the institution they were paying for. In 1974, the Board of Trustees invalidated a student referendum which supported the creation of the All-University Assembly (AUA), which would have put students, faculty and administration together to chart the path of the University.

With the defeat of AUA, GW's powers-that-be established themselves as uncompromising bureaucrats intent on retaining their previously unquestioned authority. They had won the battle, as the cliche goes.

This is the point where students and recent graduates are left. They have the strength to hurt GW's comfortable financial condition by discouraging others from enrolling here. What makes this idea so promising is that no organizational structure is necessary. All that is needed to bring about the "revolt" are the emotions and frustrations of students holding a grudge against an unresponsive monolith. Most importantly, if this anti-recruitment movement becomes widespread, GW will be hurt where it can least afford to be: income from student tuitions.

Change at GW is possible, if people are willing to grab it by its money belt.

Joseph Alan Kun

Damned No Matter What

Yes Mr. Shiffrin (Hatchet April 5), the students of GW are damned if they do and damned if they don't.

If we do have a student government, we are damned to the same type of students that have been involved in the present de-facto student government (Joint Committee, Nominating Board, Program Board, Governing Board, et.al.). They will become involved in the future student government for they are interested in amassing power and positions while at GW, as well as credentials for later use. Damned to students who will subvert the function of student government to their own ends.

We are damned to so-called leaders who resign at will, the latest, a Governing Board member who resigned before even serving (could the recent election have been his primary to run as next year's student government president?).

Damned to students who pretend to speak for the campus or represent the views of a large number of students when they are only representing their own jaundiced opinions. Damned to those egotistical individuals who promote infighting betwen student organizations rather than a united front to affect changes the students may feel beneficial.

Mr. Shiffrin, we are damned to students who prostitute themselves to an administration's wishes rather then rocking the boat and risking personal reprimand in the form of withheld recommendations to graduate school. We are damned to a Board of Trustees who would not accept the constitution as drafted by the convention for it gave the students power, something alien and radical for stagnant bureaucrats to accept. So we are damned to a weak form of student government because the administration and student organization fat cats are afraid of having their status quo upset.

And if we do not have a student government we are damned to abide by the rule of Rice Hall. Yes, we are damned to an inadequate and farcical advisory system, damned to rising parking rates and tuition; increases inflicted on the students without question or investigation by the present committees.

We are damned to the will of students who are not accountable or responsible to the other students who are affected by the elites' decisions.

Damned to a physical plant department more interested in planting azaleas and tulips then refitting an outdated chemistry, physics or biology lab.

Damned to an administration that would rather see the students pit themselves against each other than have their own practices put under question. Damned to self-appointed counselors who tell us, "If you don't like it here, leave." Damned to a system that takes the best of its active and intelligent students and forces them into oblivion through non-acknowledgement, non-appreciation, non-support and non-cooperation.

Damned to a student body that reeks of apathy.

And last of all damned to a newsppaer that will not effectively question the administration for fear of losing its free (though often irresponsible) press. A newspaper that adversely influences student opinion without chance for rebuttal, counterpoint or correction before an important referendum, for it always has the last word.

Student government is damned to failure because no one is willing to work to make it work and those students lacking position, authority or knowledge speak from their ivory towers offering no assistance, only criticism, unthought, and venom in large quantities.

I agree with you Mr. Shiffrin. We are damned if we do and damned if we don't. And Mr. Shiffrin, I will meet you at the gates of Hell with all the rest of the GW students and administration.

Equal Rights

Do you really know about the Equal Rights Amendment? The ERA will force wives to earn one-half of the family income. The ERA will put any woman, including mothers, on the front lines in a combat situation. The ERA will make everyone use unisex toilets. April fool! All of the above and many other similar allegations are false. The ERA will do none of these things.

On the other hand, ERA will equalize Social Security benefits. At the present time, widowers, even those with small children, can collect from their wives' earnings only if she supplied over half of his support.

ERA will abolish the originally necessary protective employment laws, which are now used mainly to discriminate against women. ERA will extend laws against rape to include sexual assaults against any person. In short, ERA will make any discrimination on the basis of sex whether against women or men unlawful.

As a member of GW students for the ERA, I have been sorely disappointed by those who are unwilling to work for, and even bitter toward, the ERA. There is no reason for this bitterness, especially if the opinion is an uninformed one. Educate yourself about the Equal Rights Amendment, get involved, and talk to state legislators.

If you care about yourselves, your family, and sons and daughters yet to be born, help us make the deadline for ratification by 38 states in 1979.

—Patricia Taylor

Hatchet Mistaken On Poll

The recent survey cited in the article headlined "Student Government Survey: Apathy Prevails" (April 1) indicated a lack of thought and planning on the part of both the editors and the writer(s).

About 1 p.m. Monday, I was approached outside the library by two people who did not identify themselves and asked what I thought of the new constitution. As I had just ended a morning of classes, I had not picked up the Hatchet (and even if I had, I would not have had enough time to read it). I said that I had not seen the constitution circulated around the University and was told, "Well, it's in today's Hatchet." I suspected they were from the newspaper and, indeed, I was quoted in Thursday's Hatchet as being representative of "apathetic students".

It was unrealistic of the editors to have assumed that several hours after the paper was released, enough students would have had time to read the newspaper in its entirety so that a survey could be conducted. Even for those students who did have free time, the length of the constitution most likely prohibited careful reading until later in the day. Conducting the survey on Friday may not have changed the results but it certainly would have been fairer to all quoted.

Olivia Selinger

Ed. note: The reader is right. Better planning by the editorial staff was needed, and the reporter should have identified himself. The Hatchet will be more careful when undertaking similar projects in the future.

'False Alarm'

On April 5, at approximately 1 a.m., a fire alarm sounded at Thurston Hall. I sprang from my bed, quickly dressed, and proceeded through the smoke-filled corridor to the designated fire escape. I was making good time until I reached the seventh floor landing where I came to an abrupt halt. I remained there for the next 15 minutes.

It was apparent to me that students on the lower floors considered this another false alarm, having no regard for their own safety or the welfare of others. It was not the first time this occurred, but I hope it will be the last! I urge residents of Thurston Hall to adopt a more mature attitude responding to fire alarms.

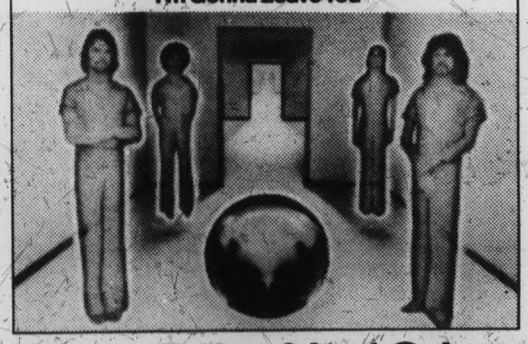

Does Thurston Hall meet current D.C. fire regulations concerning fire escapes? If it does, then the fire regulations are not worth the paper they are written on.

I submit that something should be done. A serious fire could cause a panic, and many unsuspecting students could be hurt or killed.

Clutch Double By Tucker Buffaloes Bison, 6-5

A dramatic ninth inning double by Avram Tucker lifted the GW baseball team over visiting Howard University Tuesday, 6-5. The win evens the Colonials' record at 6-6.

After Howard had tied the game in the top of the ninth, Doug Cushman led off the bottom half of the inning by reaching first on an error charged to Bison third baseman Spanky Newman. Kevin Bass reached first on a fielder's choice, forcing Cushman. A wild pitch by pitcher John Chestnut sent Bass to second, which set the stage for Tucker's clutch hit.

"Being able to come from behind is the sign of a good team," said coach Mike Toomey, "We've been playing heads up, aggressive ball. The pitching has been good and the defense has been excellent."

The last four outings for the Buff have either gone into extra innings or been decided by one run.

"Playing Howard is like playing a track team. Once they get on base there's a good chance that they will steal a base on you. There's an old baseball saying that speed is power. Howard certainly proves that," Toomey said.

As a team, Howard is one of the best base-stealing ones in the country. The Bison stole five bases on the afternoon, while being thrown out twice by GW catcher Larry "Buddha" Cushman. Their number one base stealer, Elwood Holland, swiped four of the five sacks stolen by the Bison.

Mike Howell started the game for the Buff and pitched seven strong innings, scattering eight hits while striking out four. "This may be the best game Howell has pitched since he's been here," Toomey said. "He kept the ball low for seven innings. When he started getting the ball up, I had to go with Kevin Ziegler.

Ziegler pitched three innings in relief, getting credit for the win.

Howard touched Howell for runs in the first and second innings on RBI singles by Brian Wallace and Kenny Warren. GW got those back with one to spare in the second with a combination of a hit batsman, a bloop single, two Bison errors, and a bunt single. Al Johnson, Mark Sydnor, and Jim Goss knocked in the runs.

Leading 3-2, GW padded their lead in the third. Joel Oleinik walked, and Cushman was hit by a pitch for the second time in the game. After Johnson moved the runners up, a single by Goss brought Oleinik across for the Buff's fourth run.

Sydnor's second run-scoring single of the game gave Howell a 5-2 lead to work with. Howell ran into trouble in the seventh when a single, a stolen base, and another RBI single by Wallace made the score 5-3 with none out. Ziegler was put in to stop the rally.

Fireman Ziegler went into the final stanza with the two run lead intact. A bloop single by Newman was followed by a towering home run by Warren to tie the score. This set the stage for Tucker's heroics in the bottom of the ninth.

"We have been playing some tough competition," Toomey said, "And we've got a lot of tough games to go. Al Johnson has been playing some great third base for us, and Larry Cushman has been excellent behind the plate. The defense has looked good all year, and now the pitching is starting to come around."

With starter Craig Floyd out for at least another week with a strained arm, the Colonial pitching staff seems thin. The void is being filled so far, however.

Tallent Named MVP

The Tuesday night basketball dinner sponsored by Colonial Incorporated, an alumni group supporting the Buff, had sentimental fanfare, long toasts from honored alumni and guests and, of course, awards.

As expected, Pat Tallent was voted Most Valuable Player for the second year in a row. Several new awards were also presented, including a scholarship to the graduating senior with the highest scholastic average, which went to Jim Peters. The 110 Per Cent Award for the player who worked the hardest during practice and in games, went to freshman Mike Samson.

Also honored for the best free-throw percentage was John Holloran. He averaged 85 per cent from the line. The best rebounder award went to Leslie Anderson, and Kevin Hall was named the most improved player. Tallent and Haviland Harper were honored for becoming the 14th and 15th GW players respectively to break the 1,000 point career mark.

University alumni Joe Gallagher and Ray Hanken were inducted into the GW Athletic Hall of Fame. Gallagher, athletic director of St. John's High School in D.C., was captain of the 1942-1943 Southern Conference basketball champions. Hanken played varsity football at GW and for the New York Giants. He coached GW football and is currently a professor in the GW department of human kinetics and leisure studies.

Morgan Wooten, coach at DeMatha High School, toasted about 150 guests in the University club, while K.C. Jones, coach of the Washington Bullets, spoke on coaching. GW basketball coach Bob Tallent, made the closing speech after the showing of a film highlighting the season.
